(52) Copyright, Licensing & Distribution Protocols

1. Integrity Statement

TCORF works as a reference standard only while every copy says the same thing. A modified copy that still carries the name is the failure this document is written against. The rules below are therefore narrow: they restrict what may be distributed as the framework and the misuse of its name set out in Section 5, and they leave discussion, criticism and explanation of it unrestricted.

The canonical English documentation at www.tcorf.com is the only version to cite, file, or rely on. Any other version, in any language, is not the framework.

2. Prohibited Actions

Without explicit prior written authorization from the Producer:

• Modification. Altering the text, structure, or numbering of any document.

• Partial redistribution as the framework. Distributing an incomplete set, or individual documents, presented as the framework. Sharing a single document for reference, review or criticism is not restricted.

• Translated documentation. Creating or distributing a translated version of the documents.

• Commercial exploitation of the text. Selling, reselling, or bundling the documentation for profit, including inclusion in paid books, paid courses, or access-restricted websites.

3. Commentary, Explanation and Derived Media

Discussion, review, criticism, teaching and explanation of the framework are unrestricted, in any language and in monetized media, subject to the limits below and in Section 5, and to one condition: the material states that the English documentation at the official source is the only version to cite, file, or rely on.

This includes explainers, case studies, debate material, subtitles, narration, reaction content, quotation of any Right in full, and reading from the documents on air. Quoting the framework in English is not translating it. Nothing in Section 2 restricts criticism, including criticism that reproduces the English text it criticizes.

The boundary against Section 4: explaining the framework is unrestricted; assessing a client against it is licensed work.

Commentary in other languages. Commentary in another language may quote translated passages, including in subtitles or narration, where each passage is quoted in order to comment on it, is marked as an unofficial translation, and is accompanied by its Right number or document reference and the official source. Translated text may not, in any single work or combined across a series, channel, playlist, collection or coordinated set of works, reproduce a whole document, a substantial part of one, or substantially all of the Rights. Such material is a translated documentation set under Section 2, whatever it is called; labelling it unofficial, educational, commentary or criticism, or adding commentary to it, does not change that.

Reading in your own language. Any User may translate the documentation on the fly, including with AI tools, for private comprehension, at their own risk and without permission. AI tools may be used to understand the framework in any language, provided the English documentation is what is given to the tool.
This pathway is provided as-is. Machine and ad-hoc translation introduces errors, and a translated reading carries no warranty of correctness. The English documentation remains the only version to cite, file, or rely on, and any formal reference — a request under Document 40 [REF:D40], a filing, a citation — uses the English wording.
What may not be distributed is a translated documentation set: stored, exported, published, shared or circulated translations of the documents themselves. The restriction is on distributing a second version of the framework, not on reading it in your language.
No liability for translations. Every translation of the framework is made and used at the translator's and the reader's own risk. This applies whether it is made for private reading, quoted in commentary under this Section, produced by AI, or made in breach of Section 2. No translation is official or a statement of the Producer, and none creates a contract or any obligation. The User bears full responsibility for interpretation, reliance and downstream use. To the maximum extent permitted by law, the Producer accepts no liability for any translation, its errors, or any reliance on it or consequence of it, whoever made it. Any remaining liability is limited as set out in the Terms of Use (Document 51).

4. Permissions
Individuals — free, no application required. Individual Owners and citizens, content creators, debaters, educators, researchers, journalists and non-profit advocates acting in a private capacity, and comparable individual use, may freely share, copy and distribute the documentation set, complete and unmodified, at no cost and without application. Where such work is carried out on behalf of, employed by, or commissioned by an organization, it is organizational use and the paragraphs below apply. These permissions are subject to Section 5.
Organizations of any kind — closed by default. No license is granted to any organization: states, authorities, municipalities, corporations, associations, political parties, vendors, consultancies, or their personnel. Organizations may read the documentation from the official source to decide whether to apply; no storage, printing or internal-circulation restriction applies to reading for that purpose.
Deployment, internal distribution, policy integration, official adoption or endorsement, and any operational use require a license, obtained in advance of the activity licensed. This includes building, marketing or selling software, platforms, services or advisory work that implements, assesses against, or is otherwise based on the framework's logic, nomenclature or metric structures.
Admission Protocol. A license exists only where the Producer issues an invoice and that invoice is settled in full. The organization applies; the Producer may accept by issuing an invoice, decline, or not respond. No contract is formed by application, by donation, or by any communication short of an issued and settled invoice, and no response to an application is a refusal rather than a pending decision. Donations are gratuitous gifts and confer no rights. A license is valid only for a period in which fees are settled and no arrears exist; use outside such a period is unauthorized use.

Unauthorized use. Where an organization deploys, internally distributes, adopts or endorses, or builds upon the framework without a license, the Producer may issue a retroactive license invoice covering the period of unauthorized use. The amount is not less than one annual commercial license fee for that organization, and may reflect the scale and duration of the unauthorized use. This is a licensing remedy, not a subscription: payment of such an invoice does not create a license, which is formed only under the Admission Protocol above. Applying after the fact does not cure the earlier period. The Producer's other rights and remedies are unaffected.

Responding to an Owner. Where an Owner cites this framework in a request, the organization addressed may retain, circulate internally and consult the documentation as necessary to understand and respond to that request. This is not deployment and requires no license. Retention beyond the handling of the request, or use for any other purpose, requires a license. It confers no right to use the framework for the organization's own purposes, to reference it in external communications, or to distribute it beyond that handling.

Official review and legal process. Nothing in this document restricts the retention, internal circulation or preservation of the documentation by a public authority, court or tribunal where required for regulatory review, judicial or administrative proceedings, archival deposit, or a comparable statutory function. Such use is not deployment, requires no license, and confers no right to use the framework for the authority's own governance purposes.

5. Misuse and Misattribution

Misattribution. Presenting altered or fabricated text as the framework, or presenting any statement as the Producer’s position, is prohibited. This includes presenting any rating, score, certification, audit result or translation as issued, approved or endorsed by the Producer.

Reputation Clause. The framework, its name and excerpts may not be used:

• to threaten, promote, incite or glorify violence, or to promote violent extremism or hatred against people for who they are;

• to threaten, harass or intimidate any person;

• to claim legal authority, personal immunity or exemption from law, including “sovereign citizen” and similar pseudo-legal claims, or to assert TCORF-defined rights as if they were legally enforceable (Document 53, Section 5);

• to make statements of fact known to be false in order to damage the reputation of any person or organization.

Anti-Propaganda Clause. The framework, its name and excerpts may not be used for propaganda, disinformation or hostile influence operations, including:

• fabricated, falsified or knowingly misleading requests, evidence, audits or results presented as produced under the framework;

• coordinated inauthentic activity, including use by or on behalf of a state, party, organization or foreign actor presented as independent action by citizens or Owners;

• requests made in the names of people who did not make them, or submitted in volume to obstruct an organization rather than to obtain a response;

• presenting the framework as belonging to, endorsing or endorsed by any political party, movement, campaign or ideology, or using its name to mobilize support for one.
Effect. Any use described in this Section revokes all permissions under this document and terminates any license, from the first such use and without refund. Permissions are restored only by the Producer in writing. Misuse by an organization is also unauthorized use under Section 4; payment of an invoice does not authorize the misuse, and no license will be granted for it. The Producer need not give notice, and silence is not consent or waiver.
Limits. Requests, complaints, audits, reporting, protest and criticism directed at an organization are not misuse because the organization objects to them, finds them damaging, or describes them as propaganda or harassment. Criticism of the framework or the Producer, however hostile, is not misuse, provided any text it reproduces is reproduced accurately (Section 3). Only the Producer may invoke this Section. It confers no right on any organization or third party and does not affect any person's rights under applicable law.

6. Version Integrity
Each release is published with a file digest list at www.tcorf.com. A copy whose digest does not match the published list for its version is not the framework, whatever it is called. The list at the official source is authoritative; a digest list distributed inside a document set authenticates nothing, since a modified set can carry a modified list.

Operational Note: These protocols apply in addition to the Terms of Use (Document 51 [REF:D51]). Users must also review the Disclaimer (Document 53 [REF:D53]) before deployment.